BON EDUCATION

The Education Newsletter from Emerging Markets

From Our Blog

From disruptive innovation to Arab youth unemployment, we wrote about some important topics in our blog this month. Have a look and send us your thoughts!

Arab Youth Boom & Education

Founder and CEO, Anna Batchelder examines Arab youth education demographics in her blog post: A Response to Education for Employment: Realizing Arab Youth Potential. With growing youth populations in the MENA region, how can governments improve education and create jobs?

Extreme Learning

Traditionally the wealthiest schools and school systems in the world are held up as the salient examples for the "rest of us" to learn from. In our blog post, Extreme Learning, we discuss a piece of research that turns this idea upside down. Studying under-resourced schools reveals some interesting case studies.

News

Bon at the Global EdTech Forum

CEO, Anna Batchelder, spoke at the Global Edtech Forum where she presented on the use of social media in education. During her presentation, Anna spoke about the importance of empowering teachers and giving them skills to access the abundant resources available through the Internet and Web 2.0 technologies such as blogs, podcasts and social networks.

Bon in The National

The National, Abu Dhabi's English Newspaper featured an article on Bon's recent involvement with the Sheikh Saud bin Saqr Al

Qasimi Foundation in the creation of the Ras

al Khaimah's \(RAK\) Teacher's Network. The Network is an online platform where teachers exchange best practices and ideas. To find out more about the RAK Teacher's Network, check our recent blog post.

What We're Thinking About

BridgeIT is a program recently put in place in Tanzania where mobile phones are used to transmit educational videos into the classroom. By connecting private industry, NGOs, and the government, schools are able to receive high quality educational resources for classrooms. Teachers access movie archives, download content and sync it to television displays in the classroom to enrich and supplement the curriculum. Check it out here.
